"Rebuilt by J G Haskins & Co. Bristol"

The organ was given to the church – possibly from Horfield Methodist Church - shortly after Hartcliffe was built in the early 1960's.

The organ could have been built by either W G Vowles or J G Haskins. The plate says it was rebuilt by Haskins -- possibly when the pneumatic action was fitted to Swell and Pedal.

Philip Carter played the organ between 1963 and 1967. The pipe work spoke well, although the pedal department was very quiet as it was on the other side of a screen at the rear of the gallery. The manual and pedal action was noisy, there obviously having been no spare cash to replace felts at the time of installation.

The electricity supply has been disconnected from the blower for some years. The organ has resided in the disused building for 15 years.

The action will need attention and the reservoir needs releathering.

At a recent inspection there was no evidence of damp, rot or water ingress.

The organ is immediately available as the building is shortly to be demolished.
